THE BLUE AND GRAY

An Episode of the Inaugural Parade.

Far up the long marching line there came a ringing roar of cheers, and then as the grand parade swept swiftly past there thrilled sweetly through the clear November air the thrilling music of the fife and drum. The tune awakened memories of long ago was "The Girl I Left Behind Me." In front of the musicians, whose hair was silvery white, there marched two comrades now, who in the dreary days ago had been bitter foes upon the field of strife and blood. One wore the blue, the other was garbed in the gray, and between them they bore the stately banner of their country. Behind, with "heads erect and chins drawn in and eyes to the front," with steady tread, in spite of age and passing years, there marched side by side, the veterans in blue and gray. The grandeur and splendor of the great parade were forgotten and watching thousands cheered these comrades of today. Tears of joy streamed down many a furrowed cheek and countless thankful hearts sent up to heaven a prayer of gratefulness that the enemies of a better past were dead beyond recall, and that forever in Oklahoma there would be no north, no south, no east or west, but a grand and united man and womanhood, marching under one flag and loving one country.—Clim, Worrall in Hobart Chief.

A Mistake.

Not one of us, even the most good natured, likes to have his mistakes pointed out. We may appear not to mind corrections and accept them with a smile, but it is human nature to smart under correction, although some of us may be clever enough to conceal the smart; hence the fewer mistakes we call attention to in others the better. Two-thirds of the mistakes we make are trivial. Their correction is unimportant. Why, then, notice them? Yet some people do, and do so constantly. A person speaks of having done a certain thing on Thursday, when in reality it was done on Wednesday. If no important point is involved, why call attention to the mistake? What good does it do to have the exact day set right? It is a matter of no importance, so why insist upon correcting the trivial error? Starch friendships have often been pricked by this needless of needless correction. It is a great art, this art of learning to allow others to be mistaken when the mistake is unimportant. Few learn it, but those who do are among the most comfortable friends one can have.

Arbiters of Hairdressing.
"I want to learn the latest thing in hairdressing," said the visitor as soon as he landed in New York. "Take me to a hairdresser's establishment, so I can look things over."

"No, indeed," said her New York friend. "We will go there after you know what you wish to buy, but the place to learn how to dress your hair is in the dry goods shops. All you have to do is to study the salesgirl's hair. It is always done in the latest mode, and they all do it alike, so you cannot mistake. Sometimes it is badly exaggerated, but, of course, you don't have to copy that."

"I didn't know the shopgirls were your arbiters of fashion in New York," "Not in all respects, but you see, hairdressing doesn't cost anything. To have the latest styles in clothes or jewelry is expensive, but one can be a very bowling swell in the matter of hair without its costing a cent. Besides, they are usually restricted to the matter of gowns to plain black or possibly white blouses, so they take it all out in doing their hair."—New York Press.
